God's love for us

and our love for God aren't seasonal.
We teach our children the importance of consistency in things that are important (e.g. brushing one's teeth).
Praying in church is a necessary action for us, Catholics.
The Mass is the greatest prayer.
Bring your children to Mass on Sundays.
We need to thank God.
We need blessings, forgiveness, inspiration and God's peace, even when school is out.

Pope Francis' July Intention

For a Eucharistic life
We pray that Catholics may place the celebration of the Eucharist at the heart of their lives, transforming human relationships in a very deep way and opening to the encounter with God and all their brothers and sisters.

The Eucharist "is the source and summit of the Christian life."

CCC 1324

Your Faith Has Saved You

All really deep relationships are going to demand at some stage or other, before they can become really deep, a definitive act of surrender, abandonment, thrust of faith. To some extent it must be made in the dark. We may have plenty of grounds for trust, yet there will always be areas of mystery, of possible misunderstanding. Sooner or later we will have to take that person absolutely at their word, and their word alone, when they say they love us. We have to be ready to set aside our misgivings, reservations and doubts, and choose to stand not on ourselves and what we feel, but on the word of another. By doing so, we leave ourselves and pass over to the other. We can say that we die to ourselves in order to live by the other, and the more total commitment, the more real self. To approach marriage having made most careful provision for ourselves should the other prove faithless, to have taken every precaution against such an eventuality, is to make the whole thing a farce.

It is like this between God and us. Something very similar to what is demanded in human relationships is demanded here. Human beings, even the very best, are frail and untrustworthy by their limitation if not by their moral weakness. God is utterly trustworthy. Nevertheless, we are not going to feel that he is. There may be much, very much indeed which, to our poor human understanding, may seem the opposite. The love-union guaranteed is not on the level which we can appreciate, not one in which we can take sensible satisfaction and so a still more radical of act of faith is demanded. We have to trust blindly that this God whom we cannot savor or appreciate is his own reward. We have to go further still if we would reach the fullness of faith and be concerned only that [God] has what he wants, that he be simply the God he is regardless of ourselves. Because he is the God of love and his joy is our happiness, to will God to be God is my supreme happiness—but it will be an immediate tangible one.

St. Benedict, Abbot

Few saints have left such a palpable impact on the world as St. Benedict, founder of the great Italian monastery at Monte Cassino and author of a Rule that set a standard for the Western monastic tradition. Benedict evidently had an extraordinary power to read and discern the souls of others, and his Rule shows his rare insight into human nature. Whereas earlier monastic experiments had stressed rigorous asceticism and self-denial, Benedict's Rule was designed for ordinary human beings. The element of discipline was shifted from externals to the interior, from the flesh to the will. In place of an emphasis on fasting and mortification, Benedict substituted the discipline of humility, obedience, and accommodation to community life. Rather than envisioning a collection of individuals competing in the quest for perfection, Benedict stressed the role of community as a school for holiness.

Benedict's emphasis on the balance of work and prayer, his validation of community, and his regulation of monastic life eventually set the pattern for Western monasticism. In part this was aided by the official sponsorship of Church authorities like Pope Gregory—a monk himself. But a significant factor was the intrinsic attraction of the Rule itself and its underlying balance, moderation, and humanity. Throughout the centuries Benedictine monasteries—marked by a vision of peace, wholeness, and ecology—have offered the witness of an alternative society governed by the spirit of Christ.

"We are about to open a school for God's service, in which we hope nothing harsh or oppressive will be directed."

The Eucharist Is The Heart Of Our Life In Christ

Power of Love
In the face of an illness or an accident or a particular difficult situation, we may have a sense of bitter futility, frustration, and even resignation. Feeling totally helpless, we throw up our hands and say, "Why, God, is this happening to me?" Scriptures are filled with images of such human powerlessness. God's power, by comparison, appears limitless. These are fitting mages of the spiritual life: we approach God in fear and trembling, but as we draw closer, we find tenderness, love, and a boundless mercy beyond imagining. We begin to discover that God calls us to accept both our power and powerlessness – to embrace situations where we can and must act, and to accept situations where we must surrender and let go. The choice is not always clear, but through persistent prayer, good counsel, and good will, a path often opens unexpectedly before us. Weather today finds us clothed with power or powerlessness, feeling strong and able or angry and frustrated, we trust that God welcomes whatever we offer at the altar of prayer – where even our anger, fear, or lack of faith is transformed into the world-shaking power of love.
